

WEEK 24

INTRODUCTION

The greatest intellectual figure of ancient Greece was undoubtedly the philosopher, Plato (approximately 428-348 B.C.), the student and chronicler of Socrates. Ironically the name Plato was actually a nickname that referred not to the philosopher's now famous intellect but to his is body. The term means "broad shoulders"—probably a reference to Plato's prowess as a wrestler. His most important contributions to the western world, however, were not his grappling skills but his philosophic dialogues. Most of Plato's philosophic dialogues are presented as dramas in which Socrates, the central character, engages in a protracted discussion with one or interlocutors on a question of philosophical importance, such as "What is justice?" or "What is piety?" This method of the teacher guiding his students in the discovery of truth through the use of one-on-one questions only (no statements) has since been dubbed the Socratic method, reflecting the impact of Plato's dialogues on education itself. In the Apology, Socrates is accused of crimes against the city of Athens and must give an account of his teaching before the assembled citizenry. Despite a moving and challenging defense, Socrates is convicted by the Athenian mob and, following the sentencing phase of this judicial process, is condemned to death.

THE APOLOGY OF SOCRATES

SOCRATES' DEFENSE

Section 1

How you have felt, O men of Athens, at hearing the speeches of my accusers, I cannot tell; but I know that their persuasive words almost made me forget who I was - such was the effect of them; and yet they have hardly spoken a word of truth. But many as their falsehoods were, there was one of them which quite amazed me; - I mean when they told you to be upon your guard, and not to let yourselves be deceived by the force of my eloquence. They ought to have been ashamed of saying this, because they were sure to be detected as soon as I opened my lips and displayed my deficiency; they certainly did appear to be most shameless in saying this, unless by the force of eloquence they mean the force of truth; for then I do indeed admit that I am eloquent. But in how different a way from theirs! Well, as I was saying, they have hardly uttered a word, or not more than a word, of truth; but you shall hear from me the whole truth: not, however, delivered after their manner, in a set oration duly ornamented with words and phrases. No indeed! but I shall use the words and arguments which occur to me at the moment; for I am certain that this is right, and that at my time of life I ought not to be appearing before you, O men of Athens, in the character of a juvenile orator - let no one expect this of me. And I must beg of you to grant me one favor, which is this - If you hear me using the same words in my defense which I have been in the habit of using, and which most of you may have heard in the agora, and at the tables of the money-changers, or anywhere else, I would ask you not to be surprised at this, and not to interrupt me. For I am more than seventy years of age, and this is the first time that I have ever appeared in a court of law, and I am quite a stranger to the ways of the place; and therefore I would have you regard me as if I were really a stranger, whom you would excuse if he spoke in his native tongue, and after the fashion of his country; - that I think is not an unfair request. Never mind the manner, which may or may not be good; but think only of the justice of my cause, and give heed to that: let the judge decide justly and the speaker speak truly. And first, I have to reply to the older charges and to my first accusers, and then I will go to the later ones. For I have had many accusers, who accused me of old, and their false charges have continued during many years; and I am more afraid of them than of Anytus and his associates, who are dangerous, too, in their own way.

Section 2

But far more dangerous are these, who began when you were children, and took possession of your minds with their falsehoods, telling of one Socrates, a wise man, who speculated about the heaven above, and searched into the earth beneath, and made the worse appear the better cause. These are the accusers whom I dread; for they are the circulators of this rumor, and their hearers are too apt to fancy that speculators of this sort do not believe in the gods. And they are many, and their charges against me are of ancient date, and they made them in days when you were impressible - in childhood, or perhaps in youth - and the cause when heard went by default, for there was none to answer. And, hardest of all, their names I do not know and cannot tell; unless in the chance of a comic poet. But the main body of these slanderers who from envy and malice have wrought upon you - and there are some of them who are convinced themselves, and impart their convic-
